The President's doctors' bill must be a very large one. His four attending physicians have for forty two days given their whole time to him-at least so it is assumed. The practice of an emicent physician-and these four gentlemen are all eminent physicians-is perhaps not always worth $100 a day, although there are physicians or surgeons whose fees average that sum. There are physicians in London who see every morning from twenty to thirty patients, who call upon them at their own of fices, and who each pay one gaines for their examination, advice and precription. The in come of these physicians is therefore from $100 to $150 a day, exclusive of the fees they receive for calls made upon patients at their own residences, and consultations. But, of course, these are man at the very top of the tree; and our President's physicians, although they should be at the top of the tree also are probaby not accustomed to receive fees aggregating $100 a day or $36 500 a year. As tor the charges to be made by Drs. Agnew and Hamilton for the operations performed by the first, and for the visits and consultations of both that is a different matter. We have heard of $5,000 being paid for a singla surgical operation in this country; when the parient is rich and the operation is one requiring great skill and knowledge, fees of $1,000 are not uncommon. President Garfield is not rich, nor were the operations, as reported, at least, of great difficulty. But probably the eminent decrors attending the President do not look upon bias as a private person, but as the President, and guage their charges accordingly, expecting the government to pay, as it probably will do and should do.

The eminent English surgeon, Sir James Thempson, who performed the last operation upon the Emperor Napoleon the day before his death, is said to have received a check for a thousand guiness ($5 000,) and Sir William Gull and the other physician in at endance were understood to have also received magnificent toes. But it was at the same time stated hat they all returned their checks to M. Pietri. the emperor's private scoretary, in a joint letter. beguing him to assure the empress that the henor of attending the illustrious patient was more than a sufficient reward for their unbappily unavailing attempt to save his life.

Sir William Gull, who was the chief of the physiciats at Sandringham during the illness of the Prince of Wales, is said to have charged very roundly for his services, and to have been paid accordingly, and Sir William Jenner, who is one of the queen's favorite physicians, is un derstood to have always been very highly paid by her mijesty. But say one in London who wishes to have the honor of receiving a call from Sir William Jenner, who will come in his floo yellow coaco, with his footman and coachman in livery, can do so at the very moderate cost of two gainess, which he must wrap up in a nest little packet-two sover igos and two shillings-and cause to be deposited in a convenient place on the table near Sir William's hat and gloves.

The truth is, the matter of physician's fees is generally a very elastic one. The most of them, we believe, graduate their scale of charges by the wealth of the patient, their station in scolery, and the difficulty of the esso. That many of them-even the most eminent and skillful, and perhaps most generally the most eminent and skillful-do a great deal for nothing, is true; and that they equalize things by making the rion pay for the poor is also probably trus. We have no means of knowing what the President's physicians mean to charge; probably they have not considered that sub ject themselves. As Dr. Baroes is surgeon general of the army, and as Mr. Garfield is Commander in Chief of that small but estimable force, he may regard himself as attending the President in his official espacity, and not ectitled to observe soything. As for the others we presume they will not press Mrs. Garfield por their patient for their fees. It is probable that Congress will look after that matter at its approaching session and see that everything is made right. - N Y. Graphic.

BEMARKABLE SURGICAL OPERATIONS -An unusual case of surgical operation was recently performed in Indiana, it being the removal of a brain cancer, in which operation the entire brain was removed. The report says the operation was skillfully performed, but i. was believed the patient would not recover. Several surgeons, including a Frenchman, were once discussing the difficulties of a thigh amputation. One corgeon said he had performed the operation three time, and was only unfortunate in losing one patient "Ah," said the French surgeon, "I bave performed z; operation twenty times',' "Indeed." was the surprised query. "How many did you lose?" "Ab," was the reply,
"zey all dies, but the oper r r ation was inagni-

THE COMER.-The new comet is rapidly increasing in size as it nears the earth, and but for the bright moonlight it would be already a conspicuous object to the naked eye The telescope shows a dense nucleus, surrounded by a mass of gaseous matter, which on one side extends into a short club-shaped tail. The comet gives promise of being a splendid object after it has passed its perihelion, in the latter part of the month. It would not be surprising if this visitor rivalled or exceeded the great comet of 1858 in Splendor, since it has so far given greater promise than that comet did at a similar stage in its development. At present it can only be seen shortly
